Prompt Card

Worksheet 1. Track C, AI for Career and Productivity. Keep this card. Use it on Monday.

Name: _____ Table: _____

The four parts of a prompt

- Context: who you are, what is going on, and why it matters.
- Intent: what you want done.
- Format: length, structure, and who will read it.
- Restrictions: tone, what it must not invent, and what to leave out.

Good looks like: the core skill

One line saying what would make you hit send. Example: “Under 120 words, warm and confident, uses only the dates I have given.”

Write your prompt

Use a real email you need to send on Monday, sanitized. No names, clients, or numbers. Use “Client A,” “$X,” “my manager.” End with: “Keep it under 150 words.”

Pick ONE habit from the back of this card and use it in your prompt above. Circle the number: 1 2 3 4 5 6

Prompt Card (back)

Six habits. From Anthropic, "Prompting best practices."

- 1. Give context and say why. A reason lets it handle cases you did not spell out.
- 2. Be specific, including what good looks like. They do what you asked, so the ask should be the thing you actually want.
- 3. Say what to do, not what not to do. "Do X" gives a target. "Do not do Y" leaves every other option open.
- 4. Show an example when format matters. Showing beats describing. Use 3 to 5 diverse examples.
- 5. Give it a role in one sentence. "You are my chief of staff." It sets the voice, not the IQ.
- 6. Ask it to check itself. "Before you finish, verify your answer against my list."

Two phone tricks

- Talk instead of type: Hold the mic and brain-dump context for 60 seconds. Rambling is fine.
- Let it interview you: End with "Ask me the questions you need answered before you start," or "Improve my prompt, then run it."

Remember

Sanitize before you paste. No client name, no real number, nothing confidential.
