Track C Worksheet

Name: _____ Table: _____

The four parts of a prompt

- Context: who you are, what is going on, and why it matters.
- Intent: what you want done.
- Format: length, structure, and who will read it.
- Restrictions: tone, what it must not invent, and what to leave out.

Six habits From Anthropic, "Prompting best practices."

- 1. Give context and say why. A reason lets it handle cases you did not spell out.
- 2. Be specific, including what good looks like. They do what you asked, so the ask should be the thing you actually want.
- 3. Say what to do, not what not to do. "Do X" gives a target. "Do not do Y" leaves every other option open.
- 4. Show an example when format matters. Showing beats describing. Use 3 to 5 diverse examples.
- 5. Give it a role in one sentence. "You are my chief of staff." It sets the voice, not the IQ.
- 6. Ask it to check itself. "Before you finish, verify your answer against my list."

Part 1: Prompt it (5 min)

Pick a real email you need on Monday, sanitized, or: a tricky email, meeting notes summary, meeting prep, a short proposal. End with: "Keep it under 150 words."

My prompt (four parts plus "good looks like" line):

Part 2: Get your briefing, then draft the top one (5 min)

Ask Muse to look at your 3 most recent emails in your own inbox and give you a briefing for each one: what do I need to know, when do I need to know it, and what do I need to do next?

My briefing (one line per email: Know / When / Next):

Now draft the most urgent one.

My draft (or the key lines of it):

Part 3: Make a document (5 min)

Ask Muse to make you something useful and save it as a PDF. Try different things. Start with this one:

> "Look at my recent meeting notes and the emails I wrote. Summarize my writing style: tone, sentence length, words I use often, and how I open and close. Turn it into a one-page style guide I can give to any AI so it writes like me. Create it as a PDF."

Other things to try: a cheat sheet for my role, a checklist for a task I repeat every week, a one-page "how to work with me" guide.

What I made:

Part 4: Evaluate it: blind judge (5 min)

Judge your PDF from Part 3. Swap with your partner; they make one change to your prompt, and you make a second PDF. Hold your own phone and show both PDFs, marked only "left" and "right," to a judge from the next pair. The judge views them on your phone, then scores on this sheet. Your phone stays in your hands.

Judge picked: ☐ Left ☐ Right ☐ Could not tell

Why, in one line (check for slop: generic, invented, too long, or delete it):

The one change that would make the losing version win:

Tune it: add that change to your prompt and make the PDF again.

Part 5: Turn it into an agent (5 min)

Design the agent for the same chore. Email first: summarize your emails, then draft / reply to 1 email.

Trigger: what starts it?	AI step: what it does
Human approval: you check it	Destination: where it goes

Value: saves me _____ / week. Implication: _____
